Abstract

Social network can be found in all forms of society as it represents the essence of human being as a social creature. However, social network is easily grown in a society with full of emulation, uncertainty of life, and pressures. As an effort of maintaining the continuity of their life, circular migrants develop social network which represent creative productive attitude to response to life pressure in the city. The social network entangles consanguinity links, neighborhood, and mixture between consanguinity links and neighborhood.
